

Contributing to resources.json

About this list

We maintain a small list of some of the top Angular resources from across the community, stored in `resources.json`. This list is not intended to be comprehensive, but to act as a starting point to connect Angular developers to the rest of the community.

How do I get listed?

While we can't accept all contributions, qualifying contributions can be submitted via a PR adding yourself to the `resources.json` file. All contributions should be in the appropriate section and must meet the following criteria:

1. Your contribution must be valid, and contain a link to a page talking specifically about using Angular
2. Your contribution should have a clear and concise title and description
3. Your resource should follow our brand guidelines (see our Presskit)
4. Your resource should have significant benefit to Angular developers
5. Your resource should already have traction and praise from Angular developers
