

- Saving attachment(s) to a record returns the blob/blobs object

Previously, saving attachments did not return the blob/blobs that were attached. Now, saving attachments to a record with `#attach` method returns the blob or array of blobs that were attached to the record. If it fails to save the attachment(s), then it returns `false`.

- Don't stream responses in redirect mode

Previously, both redirect mode and proxy mode streamed their responses which caused a new thread to be created, and could end up leaking connections in the connection pool. But since redirect mode doesn't actually send any data, it doesn't need to be streamed.
